

Guideline for Acceptable Questions and Answers

Set 2

The questions from the first set are reviewed and then reorganized into clusters according to different strategies.

1. Character-based clustering:

In this approach, all questions and answers referring to a specific character in the book are grouped together. From these clusters, new questions and answers are generated, either by combining existing ones or by extrapolating additional context from them. The number of questions produced in this phase is variable, as it depends on the number of questions originally associated with each character. Main characters typically have a larger set of questions associated with them, while secondary characters are associated with fewer.

2. Paragraph-based clustering:

In this approach, questions are grouped according to the paragraph from which they were originally generated (since each question is linked to its source paragraph). From these clusters, new questions are created that differ from the first set, again by combining existing questions or by extrapolating context. For each paragraph, three questions are available from the first set, and one additional question is derived by combining them into a single formulation.

Question Validation

As for the questions of set 1, to be acceptable questions must respect the following criterias:

- Be written in the correct grammar form.
- Be unique with respect to precedent questions of the same book.
- Be short and specific.
- Must have a deterministic answer, not be open - ended
- Must concern main characters, main places, relationships or general events, not minor details of a single scene.
- Must avoid vague references (this/that/there/here).
- The questions must make sense even if read without the immediate context of the paragraph, as long as the entire book is available.
- Must not use common nouns to describe characters.

Answer Validation

To be acceptable, answers must respect the following criterias:

- Provide two answers which are both correct.
- Answers should be short and concise.
- Both answers should be grammatically correct and free from typos or spelling mistakes.
- Answers should be factually accurate and based only on the text which is given as input (no speculation).
